Met Office

NEWS

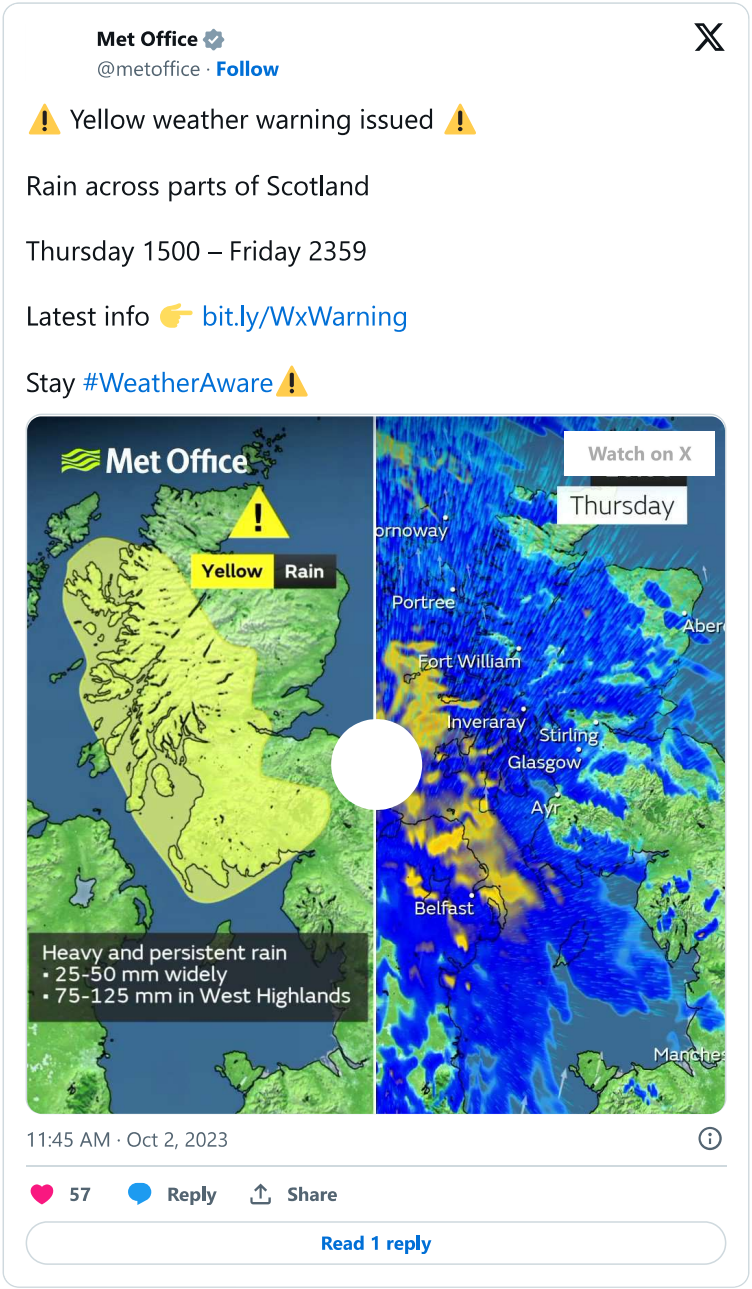
Mixed picture for the week ahead

Author: Press Office
14:42 (UTC+1) on Mon 2 Oct 2023

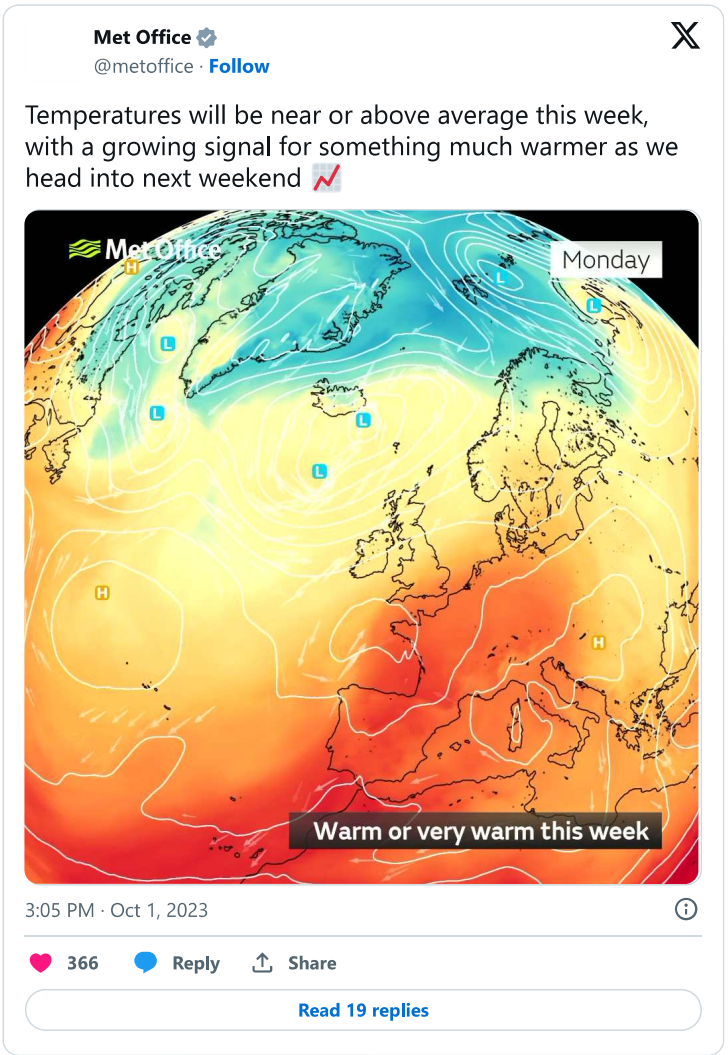
With low pressure sitting to the northwest of the UK and weather fronts trailing across the country there is a damp start to the week for many.

The rain will be heavy in the south today, especially to the east, where some travel disruption could be possible together with the odd rumble of thunder.

Tuesday will be a brighter day for everyone with a mix of sunny spells and scattered showers. The showers pushing in from the west will be most frequent in the north of the UK by afternoon and could be heavy at times. Central and southeastern areas will be drier, brighter and a bit fresher.



Met Office Deputy Chief Meteorologist, Tony Wardle, said: “Mid-week onwards will see a ridge of high pressure building across southern parts of the country bringing a settled, drier interlude here while unsettled conditions continue further north and west with more rain to come. The rain will be heavy and persistent at times and National Severe Weather warnings for rain have been issued for parts of Scotland from Wednesday through to Friday.”



Met Office
@metoffice · Follow
Temperatures will be near or above average this week, with a growing signal for something much warmer as we head into next weekend 📈
Met Office
Monday
Warm or very warm this week
3:05 PM · Oct 1, 2023
366
Reply
Share
Read 19 replies

As we head towards the end of the week warm or very warm air is likely to be drawn up from the south across the UK pushing temperatures well above average for the time of year, particularly for southern areas of the country, where some places may reach the mid 20's.

You can check the latest forecast on our website, by following us on Twitter and Facebook, as well as on our mobile app which is available for iPhone from the App store and for Android from the Google Play store.

Met Office

© Crown Copyright